VOLUME 26, NUMBER 28

July 16, 2015

Gaining Control

We arguably live in a world that is out of control. Moral deprivation, self-indulgence, and an unwillingness to submit to God are quite conspicuous. Many people have lost control of themselves, indulging in things that eventually become the gods of their lives. They are overtaken, conquered, and left defeated by all sorts of things, struggling all the while to find some sense of balance and peace in the midst of a world where self-restraint is dismissed as a needed virtue. Since the dawn of time, the solution to these problems of self-control in our world has always been the same: people must come to learn and accept that they do not belong to themselves.

Those of us who have accepted that we belong to God and not ourselves have come to realize that we are not immune to the struggles inherent in controlling ourselves. Indeed, an aspect of the fruit of the Spirit is self-control (Gal. 5:23), and, in trying to bring this to fruition in our own lives, we fail more times than we would like to admit. As God's people, we try not to allow anything else to be our master other than God, but we sometimes give in to temptation, exalting our desires above the will of God (cf. James 1:13-15; 1 John 1:10).

There are two aspects to self-control worth mentioning at this juncture. First of all, self-control requires great strength because the hardest person to say "no" to is yourself. The apostle Paul himself understood that self-control requires strength and discipline (1 Cor. 9:24-27). One man has been quoted as saying that "strength is the ability to break a chocolate bar into four pieces with your bare hands—and then eat just one of the pieces." Secondly, self-control requires patience because not everything in life is on demand. Rather than wait until we can afford something, we pull out a credit card. Rather than wait for a temptation to pass, we give in to the "urgency" of our desire (cf. 1 Cor. 10:13). Rather than wait on God to fulfill His promises, we decide God needs a little help, so we take action and create a mess.

In gaining control over our thoughts, words, and actions, we know it takes strength, discipline, and patience, but it might also help us to look at self-control in a more positive light. Instead of looking at self-control as the practice of ridding our lives of the "pleasures" of this world, maybe we should start focusing more on how self-control ultimately benefits us. Jesus said that He came into this world so that we might have the most abundant life possible (John 10:10), and I don't think Jesus was only thinking of the life hereafter. God knows what is best for us here and now. He knows what can ruin us, and we need only look out into this world from time to time to see that a lack of self-control can devastate a person. Furthermore, because God is actually concerned about us and stands ready to help, we should bathe our pursuit of self-control in prayer, seeking the grace, strength, and ability that God supplies (cf. Eph. 3:14-21; Phil. 2:12-13).

Good [Monday, July 13] morning! I am coming to you live from small town Inez, Kentucky. We have been experiencing some pretty good downpours, and fast food makes up the majority of our meals, but we are having fun. The congregation, of just around 100 members, has been extremely welcoming to us. And, of course, Penelope Gargis is our celebrity wherever we go.

I am enjoying the Inez church of Christ here, and their “just go with it” attitudes will make for some interesting stories. We are hoping the weather won’t hinder people from coming to the VBS and that the roads will allow it. When you see a road sign that says “Crack in the Road,” and you see that a quarter of the road has washed out, this is a real concern!

Please pray for the church here at Inez and for safe travels. Thank you!

Let your light shine,
Josh Ross
