VOLUME 27, NUMBER 31

August 4, 2016

The Humanity of Christ

In the early centuries of the church, just as there were teachers who denied the deity of Christ, there were some who denied His humanity. This latter error was already gaining momentum in the first century and was opposed by the writers of the New Testament, especially the apostle John. In 1 John 4:2-3, the beloved apostle writes: “[E]very spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh is from God, and every spirit that does not confess Jesus is not from God. This is the spirit of the antichrist, which you heard was coming and now is in the world already” (cf. 2:18). Similarly, 2 John 7 reads: “For many deceivers have gone out into the world, those who do not confess the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh. Such a one is the deceiver and the antichrist.” According to John, an antichrist is anyone who claims that the Christ did not come in the flesh, i.e. that the Christ was not truly or fully human.

The undermining of the humanity of Christ often took the form of the statement that Jesus only appeared to be human and to suffer. This view is known as Docetism, from the Greek word dokeo, meaning “to appear” or “to seem.” The argument went as follows: if Jesus is truly divine, then surely as God He could not really have had a human body and suffered. Such an approach is found in some of the apocryphal gospels written after the first century and influenced by Gnosticism, one of which suggests that Jesus did not really suffer on the cross. Interestingly enough, orthodox Christians were not always free of Docetic tendencies. For instance, Clement of Alexandria affirmed against Docetism that Jesus had a real body and that He ate and drank, but he could not believe that Jesus actually needed to eat. He ate, not because His body required it, but to protect His disciples from Docetism!

As with His deity, the New Testament clearly proclaims the humanity of Christ, against any form of Docetism. First of all, Jesus grew up as other human beings grow (Luke 2:40, 52). Secondly, Jesus had a body like other human beings have (John 1:14; 1 John 1:1-3). When Jesus’ side was pierced, it was real blood and water that flowed out (John 19:34). When Jesus’ lifeless body was prepared for burial, it was a real body that was handled (John 19:38-40). Third, Jesus experienced hunger (Matt. 4:2), fatigue (John 4:6), thirst (John 19:28), and all the emotions that other human beings experience (John 2:13-17; 11:35). Fourth, Jesus was tempted like other human beings are tempted. In the Gospels, we see Jesus tempted by the devil (Matt. 4:1-10; Luke 4:1-13). He was made like us “in every respect” so that He could be tempted (Heb. 2:14-18). In fact, He is “one who in every respect has been tempted as we are, yet without sin” (Heb. 4:15). Such temptation is possible only because of His full humanity.

For these reasons and others we could mention, we should affirm the humanity of Jesus Christ. As with His deity, the humanity of Christ is vital for the work of Christ in a number of ways. If Jesus was not fully human, He would not be our example and a pattern for us to follow. If Jesus was not fully human, He could not have died in our place. Gregory of Nazianzus coined a slogan that expresses this well: “That which he has not assumed he has not healed.” By becoming fully one with us, Jesus Christ was able to save us fully.

"For though I am free from all men, I have made myself a servant to all, that I might win the more;" 1 Corinthians 9:19.

This is something that Paul said in his letter to the church in Corinth.

We all know that we have to be kind and loving to the world, but sometimes we allow ourselves to get blinded by the blessings that we may receive in return for doing that. This is something that can completely undermine our work as servants to the world.

The mindset we must have is this: Be prepared to give everything without receiving anything in return. If we are constantly thinking about what we are going to get when we do good things for others, then we stop having the mindset of how we can improve our lives as servants. We thereby become too focused on how the world needs to change to better fit our own needs.

After his conversion, Paul became one of the most successful church planters in history. He would continue on to teach these congregations how to be strong, unified churches and about the different mindsets to have to continue growing in their faith. Even though Paul had a definite standing as a leader in the church, he always stayed humble enough to be a servant. He never became so prideful by the fact that he was a leader that he lost that servant mindset. This is because Paul wasn't worried about what he received for all of the awesome things he did in God's kingdom. Paul just wanted to see the kingdom flourish.

We need to always be prepared to follow this example. If we do that, then we can continuously help the church grow.

Thanks for all of the awesome experiences!
