Worshiping the God Who Is

In last's week's article, we discussed worshiping the God who isn't. It's possible to worship a caricature of God rather than the true God. If you want a good glimpse at the God who is, then all you have to do is spend some time with Paul's sermon at the Areopagus in Athens (Acts 17:22-31).

Paul's sermon on this occasion is a sermon about God. The premise of the sermon is found in verse 23: "[T]he One whom you worship without knowing, Him I proclaim to you . . ." (NKJV). So, imagine being one of those Athenians that day. Imagine looking at Paul and listening to him up on Mars Hill. Take the time right now to read Acts 17:24-31. Don't worry. I'll wait.

According to Paul, the God who exists is our creator (vv. 24a, 26), Lord (vs. 24b), benefactor (vv. 25, 28), Father (vv. 28-29a), judge (vs. 31a), and Savior (vs. 31b). The God who exists is omnipotent (vs. 24), self-sufficient (vs. 25), generous (vs. 25), impartial (vs. 26), omnipresent (vv. 27-28), spiritual (vs. 29), exacting (vv. 30-31), and righteous (vs. 31).

God is both transcendent and immanent. God is both wrathful and merciful. God is holy, and God is love. God is both demanding and compassionate. He is to be revered and loved. In His presence, we should be both cautious and confident. There's no one like Him, and only He deserves our worship.

"Therefore you are great, O LORD God. For there is none like you, and there is no God besides you, according to all that we have heard with our ears."

$86,000

I had a crazy uncle. He was rich. I liked him a lot. He was rather odd, but still I thought he was great. He had some unusual ideas. As president of a big bank, he could attend to his business anytime he wanted, so we often took hikes in the woods and picnics in the park; I was fascinated with his stories.

One day he got carried away. He had opened an account for me in his bank. It was all mine. Yet there was a strange condition. Every morning when the bank opened, he would deposit $86,000 to my personal account. Every evening when the bank closed, he removed the money I had not used.

"Wow!" I thought, "This is great."

Use it or lose it. How would I use all that money every day?

He explained that he was not talking about dollars. We all have a bank that allots 86,000 seconds a day. At night, whatever is unused is marked off as lost. It cannot be recalled. It is lost forever. Time carries no balance. While yesterday is a canceled check, and tomorrow is but a promissory note, today is cash to spend. When you fail to use the day's deposit, the loss is yours alone. You must live on today's deposit.

Killing time is slow suicide. Ben Franklin said, "Do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of." When you arise each morning, jump up and shout, "I'm rich again." When in the classroom, study. Use each moment to enrich the mind. When in competition, use moments to help the team win. When helping others (Galatians 6:10), think of the joy of serving and the beauty of hands that work.

Today is the tomorrow that you worried about yesterday. We are all rich—we just don't always know it.

"Redeeming the time" (Ephesians 5:16).

We all have things that we aren't particularly fond of doing. Whether it is something associated with our jobs, school, or chores around the house, our respective lists of things we don't like doing can get lengthy. Here are 10 things that I don't really enjoy doing, but I still do them.

- Mowing the grass
- Changing diapers
- Exercising
- Doing laundry (mainly the folding/putting away part...and who am I kidding?!? Katie does the lion's share of this.)
- Showering (I realize that this is a necessity...I do it)
- Cleaning a griddle after use
- Going to the doctor
- Paying bills
- Saying "I'm sorry"
- Watching my carbs

There are two points that I would like to make concerning this idea of doing things that we don't like to do. The first is something that I can remember my dad telling me when I was around 16 years old. "You have to do what you have to do before you can do what you want to do." You see, I just wanted to go do things with my friends, go fishing, and whatever else I enjoyed. But I had chores and responsibilities that had to be taken care of first.

Taking this a step further, I have talked with many Christians, both young and old, who have expressed a desire to be spiritually mature. The problem for many of them, however, is that there wasn't a desire to put forth the work to achieve it! Spiritual maturity is something that comes through effort. Studying God's Word. Allowing it to permeate your thoughts and actions. Praying consistently. Overcoming selfishness. We have to do these and other necessary things before we can become what we ultimately want to be!

The second point comes from something that Paul wrote in Philippians 2:14-15. We are to do all things without complaining so that we can, in turn, shine as lights to those around us! Nobody wants to be around someone that incessantly complains! Conversely, when we are around someone that remains positive, it is encouraging!

We all have things that we have to do that we don't like to do. We might as well keep as positive an attitude as we can about them. After all, you have to do what you have to do before you can do what you want to do, and our attitudes, which people will see, will either bring God glory, or they won't.

Until next time., Jeremy
